

David R. Richeson, Ph.D.

David retired in 2002 as Director General, responsible for Collections and Research with the National Museum of Science and Technology, where he had served since 1991.

This concluded a professional career of lecturing in history at the University of Alberta, and 30 years of museum activity that included both Curatorial and Administrative positions with the Provincial Museum of Alberta, the National Museum of Man, the Saskatchewan Western Development Museum and the National Museum of Science and Technology.

In retirement David has had the opportunity to travel and photograph in the Canadian North and the Arctic, as well as areas of Greenland from 2006 to 2009.
